

Lawrence Berger
Former General Counsel,
Philadelphia Museum of Art (retired)

Lawrence Berger is a retired lawyer, who spent most of his career as a partner at Morgan Lewis, an international law firm. While there he concentrated his practice on business transactions, corporate governance and nonprofit organizations. Capping off his career, from 2006 to 2016, he served as General Counsel at the Philadelphia Museum of Art. Mr. Berger has been active in both local and national charitable organizations. For over 30 years he served as Trustee of the Naomi Wood Charitable Trust. In addition, he previously served on the boards of INROADS Philadelphia, the Foundation for Self-Taught Artists, US Lacrosse (including serving as Board Chair) and the US Lacrosse Foundation. At present, Mr. Berger is an Honorary Trustee at the Philadelphia Museum of Art. He earned a B.S. degree at Michigan State University and a J.D. at the University of Virginia School of Law.
